After breakfast departure for visiting the Future Farm of an agricultural cooperative. They address the following questions: How can the interaction of the digital "helpers" in the field and in the barn be optimally successful? What are the hurdles when merging the systems? Where do the experts still have to tackle? What is helpful and goal-oriented for work and economic success, what is not? The project participants are looking for answers to these questions. They investigate new techniques and methods in agricultural technology and crop production and the networking of digital concepts and modules. In doing so, they have practice-oriented, integrated solutions instead of isolated solutions in mind. The results flow into practice-oriented training and education based on validated methods and data. Lunch at a local restaurant.
